Debate asks 'Who Decides?'

by Stacy McClendon
Chronicle managing editor

The seminar was called, "The Abortion Debate: Who Decides?" and debate began before the two speakers, Kate Michaelman and Susan Smith arrived.

Members from the California Abortion Rights Action League greeted attendees at the Tuesday, May 18 abortion debate with literature on challenges to abortion rights. Similarly, members of a Moreno Valley church were passing out flyers featuring large, color pictures of aborted fetuses.

The real exchange was waiting for the audience inside. That's when Michaelman, the Executive Director of the National Abortion Rights Action League, and Smith, the Associate Legislative Director of the National Right to Life Committee faced off on one of the dominant issues on the American political scene.

Determined by a coin toss, Michaelman spoke first. Her story is both political and personal. In 1970, Michaelman's husband deserted her and her three daughters. Shortly thereafter she found herself poor, alone and pregnant.

Unlike most women in her situation before Roe

v. Wade, she was able to obtain a legal abortion, but only after subjecting herself to the mercy of an all-male board which decided that in her circumstances, she should be able to obtain an abortion.

When she arrived at the hospital, she was informed she needed one more approval—from the husband that had just deserted her.

"I made what I believe was, in that situation, the most moral decision I ever made," Michaelman said, citing her responsibility to her three young daughters.

That is why she has spent the past several years working for abortion rights. She said she speaks on "several hundred" occasions each year.

"It is important to me to help people understand the values and principles inherent" in the abortion rights crusade she said.

"This is not a job for me. It's a life."

Through the entire evening, Michaelman stressed that "We are not pro-abortion. We would like to see fewer abortions." However, she noted that there would never be a complete end to abortion.

What she did say was that it was not the government's place to decide.

"It is about fundamental American values. It is dangerous to allow government to listen to one religious group at the expense of the rights of others."

Alleged rape victim flees to campus

by Natalie Romano
Chronicle staff writer

An alleged rape that took place just off-campus, but was reported to on-campus police, has been the subject of considerable speculation among students over the past two weeks.

In an unusual report, called a "significant incident report," made to the university president and vice-president, campus police said that on May 7 they "responded to the grass area west of the Main lot regarding a nude female, who alleged she had been sexually assaulted by two unknown Mexican males."

The report adds, however, that "the victim admitted to the officers that she was a working prostitute."

The woman, not a CSUSB student, told campus police that she had been picked up by three men off-campus and driven to the area west of Northpark Blvd. near the CSUSB campus. She then told the police that "she was assaulted and beaten" by two of the three men, stated the special report.

According to the "official" police report, not the "significant incident report," the victim, a black woman, made her way to the area near the university president's parking space where "she was screaming...that she had been raped."

She told university police, according to their report, she had been "forced to oral(ly) copulate two of the three Hispanic male adults." The report said that after one tore her clothes off, he "forced her onto the ground and had sex with her from behind, his penis penetrating her vagina." In addition, she said that two of the men "continued beating her" through the incident.

According to the campus police report, the alleged rape took place in the field behind the San Bernardino city water tanks west of the university. The victim told police that, after it was over, she got away and "started running through the brush with one of the males chasing her; she ended...here at the university."

Since the alleged rape took place off-campus, San Bernardino City Police were called to conduct the investigation. In addition, the victim was treated on university grounds by the San Bernardino Fire Paramedics.

Last month, the San Bernardino Police Department had responded to another rape in the same general vicinity.

The alleged victim started running through the brush with one of the men chasing her; she ended...here at the university."

Privacy doesn't protect abortion

by Nelland K. Derry
Chronicle staff writer

With the present conservative Supreme Court decision on the Pennsylvania Abortion Law coming this summer, and imminent destruction looming in the future for Roe vs. Wade, it is imperative for students to understand the reasoning behind these decisions and the illegitimacy of the "Freedom of Choice Act" now under consideration by Congress.

The arguments against the overturning of Roe, and for the attempt by Congress to create a "right" to abortion, have extended the unenumerated "right to privacy" to abortion. This privacy code was originally created to protect the traditional privacy of the government-sanctioned institution of marriage. This right was never intended to blanket all forms of human action. If it had, activities such as drug abuse, prostitution, and pornography would exist beyond government control.

It surprises most people, but nowhere within the Constitution are the words "privacy" or "abortion" even mentioned. But, with the Courts of the late '60s and early '70s, suffering from hallucinations, ludicrous decisions of this type became common. (Not since the Dred Scott case of 1857 had we seen such an obvious demonstration of Constitutional perversion.)

Why is government involved?

by Jeff Lowe
Chronicle staff writer

The argument is concerning the right of a woman to have an abortion. I am not going to argue the general issue of the government invading the privacy of women. Rather I am going to discuss why is the Government getting involved at all?

In my opinion the "right" to an abortion is merely the informed decision of a woman to have a medical procedure. Whether her actions are immoral is none of the concern of her neighbor, her employer, or her Congressman.

The argument between pro-life and pro-choice is a topic that should never have been dragged into the political arena. Instead the issue of abortion should have remained the social, sexual topic that it is.

The objection I make is that the government became involved at all. Because once they became involved they will always be entangled in the issue. But I think we can resolve the issue by doing three things: strike down the Pennsylvania Abortion Law, cease funding abortion clinics and deny the Supreme Court the ability to hear cases on abortion.

In doing these three things the Gov-

Affordable education escaping California, Chancellor says

by Kevin Kelley
Chronicle staff writer

The California State University system, whose credo is affordable higher education for all, is on the verge of a 40 percent fee increase making its credo almost unattainable. Yet, the system finds the increase a necessity for its survival.

Barry Munitz, Chancellor of the CSU system, says that "for more than 30 years the state's Master Plan for Higher Education reached for goals far beyond any set by other educational institutions." But the weighty dreams of the plan and the meager funding by the state in recent years has spelled doom for higher education in California.

Warren Fox, director of the Post Secondary Education Commission, which advises the governor and the Legislature on higher education policy, agrees with Munitz. He feels that the CSU system is in financial trouble.

The Cal State system receives no constitutionally guaranteed Proposition 98 money, as the community colleges do, nor does it have the financial independence that the state Constitution grants to the University of California system. Fox adds the the CSU system "finds itself in a very difficult position."

The 20 campuses, and the Chancellor's Office of the California State University, are primarily financed by the taxpayers of California. Of the $2 billion total yearly cost, a projected $1.69 billion is supplied by the state, according to the Source of Funds and Average Costs report. The student fees and support from other sources make up the rest of the money.

The state of California divides up tax dollars into three areas: welfare, the school system, and everything else (CHP, DMV, etc.). For the first time ever in 1990-91, the state found itself in a budgetary deficit. Plainly, it had allocated more funds out than it was receiving through taxes. At the end of the year the state was $7 billion in the red.

The $7 billion was made up by raising half the money from new/higher taxes and the other half was made up in a "one time only 10 percent fee increase" of the CSU fees.

It is projected that this year's budget is in even worse shape. Governor Pete Wilson has stated that he is in favor of a decrease of funds for the CSU system. The lessening would be made up in escalating student fees.

On April 7, the state Assembly voted on a budget package that would increase fees by 10 percent. The package now goes to the legislature and, if approved, awaits Gov. Wilson's signature.

"They keep telling everyone they've approved a 10 percent increase, but it's really 20 percent," said Jeff Chang, a Sacramento based representative of the state student association, referring to the "one-time only" increase of the previous year.

Chang believes that the California Faculty Association, the unionized teachers organization of which 70 percent of the CSU faculty belong, could help alleviate some of the cost.

Teachers pay?

The CFA is asking for its annual cost of living increase, which has been denied for the last two years, and its Merit Salary Adjustments (MSA) which have been denied the last year. The CFA is also asking to be left out of the 5 percent wage reduction being implemented on all state employees.

"If state employees on the whole are not getting raises, then why should the CSU people" says

Chang. He adds, "what distinguishes the CSU faculty from other civil service employees on the state payroll."

Dr. Michael Clarke, head of the CSU San Bernardino branch of the CFA, explains that 10,000 classes (system wide) have been deleted. That increased the existing workload and is the key reason for the faculty's desire for exclusion in the wage reduction.

Chancellor Munitz has placed a June 5 deadline on all 20 CSU campuses to come up with an 8 percent budget cut. Along with the budget cut, it was suggested by San Diego State President Thomas Day, at a recent meeting held in Long Beach, that the remaining faculty and staff take a 10 percent pay cut to avoid even further layoffs. The CFA and the California State Employees Assn., the two largest Cal State unions collectively representing over 30,000 employees, balked at Day's idea.

The CFA and the CSEA feel that cuts should first come in the administrative expenses. At the Long Beach meeting, the president of the CFA, Patrick Nicholson told the LA Times that the union is willing "to talk about a number of issues, including compensation issues," but feels that Cal State must first make "substantive proposals for cuts in administrative positions."

According to Chang, CSU faculty earn an average of $54,281 a year, with a tenured professor topping the list at a median salary of $60,752. The union explains that tenure salaries range from about $28,000 for new teachers to $60,000 for more senior professors. These numbers have remained unchanged in the last two years with the denial of their COLA's and MSA's.

Lottery money

Paul Woodruff, R-Forest Falls, refuses to accept the 40 percent fee increase. Woodruff explains that the money could come from an existing endowment fund set up from scraping the Lottery money barrel. Assemblyman Bob Campbell, R-Richmond, refers to the $30 million fund as a "savings account when you are bankrupt."

Clarke responds that he believes that the endowment money could be a "stop gap measure, but it would only be a quick fix. What do you do when the endowment is used up?" Which, all indications say, would be next year.

The 40 percent increase, if passed through the Assembly, would amount to about an extra $372 a year for the average student fees, explains Clarke. The 10 per-

Grads marching into the future for 1992

by Amy Heritage
Chronicle news editor

Commencement will be held June 13 at 5:30 pm in the area between Pfau Library and the gymnasium. Over 15,000 bleachers and folding chairs will be arranged. Audience seating is free on a first-come, first-serve basis.

Chancellor of the California State University system, Dr. Barry Munitz, will deliver the Commencement address. Music will be provided by the CSUSB symphonic band, led by Kraig Williams.

After crossing the stage when their names are called graduates will be required to return directly to their seats in order to ensure dignity throughout the ceremony.

The CSUSB Newman Catholic Fellowship will hold a Baccalaureate Mass and reception June 7 for persons of all faiths in the graduating class.

Hooding ceremonies for those graduating from masters programs and receptions will be held by each school the afternoon prior to Commencement.

The school of Humanities will hold a reception at 3:00 pm in the first floor of the University Hall. The hooding ceremony will be held at 3:30 pm in UH 106.

The school of Education will hold two hooding ceremonies, one at 1:30 pm and one at 3:30, both in the Creative Arts Building, Recital Hall. Each will be followed by a reception in the Faculty Office Building.

The school of Social and Behavioral Sciences will hold a reception in the Lower Commons at 3:30 pm. Masters candidates will receive information from their departments concerning the hooding ceremony.

The school of Natural Sciences will hold a reception at 2:30 pm on the Physical Science Building patio. The hooding ceremony will be at 3:30 pm in room 10 adjacent to the patio.

The school of Business and Public Administration will hold a reception at 3:00 pm in the Upper Commons. The hooding ceremony at 3:30 pm on the Upper Commons patio.

Leadership supports proposition 153

CSUSB could receive $46 million if bond measure passes

by Anthony Bruce Gilpin
Chronicle opinion editor

Proposition 153, the Higher Education Facilities Bond Act of 1992, is a voter initiative on the June 2 ballot. If approved by the voters, Proposition 153 would authorize the State to sell $900 million in General Obligation Bonds. Proceeds from the bond sale would be used to finance construction and renovation of buildings at public colleges and universities over the next two years.

According to the Public Affairs Office, Cal State, San Bernardino stands to gain $46 million if Prop 153 is approved. The University plans to use that money to construct a new Visual Arts building, and to prepare architectural plans for new buildings for the School of Education and the School of Social and Behavioral Sciences. Funds from Proposition 153 would also pay to renovate the John Pfau library building. All of these projects should be completed by the mid-1990's, when CSUSB's student population is anticipated to approach 15,000.

Prop. 153 would also provide $2.6 million for equipment purchases and preparation of architectural drawings for new buildings at the University of California, Riverside. The bond will also fund expansion and renovation projects at other public institutions of higher learning, including the California Community Colleges.

Dr. Judith Rymer, CSUSB Vice President for University Relations, predicts that Proposition 153 will stimulate the California's economy by providing jobs and commerce. "Statewide, Proposition 153 would provide about 13,000 jobs, generate $450 million in payroll, and $2 billion in economic activity," said Rymer.

"To me, Proposition 153 is an investment in the future of our region, our state and our country," said Dr. Rymer. "I think education has to be supported, and this is one pretty reasonable way, in terms of the economics of it, that people can support higher education."

General Obligation Bonds are a common method by which the State of California provides long-term financing for large capital projects. Cal State, San Bernardino's University Hall building was financed with monies from a bond approved by the voters in 1988.

General Obligation Bonds constitute a loan from the bond holders, which the state must repay with interest. Many bond measures have been defeated in recent elections as the electorate has become more reluctant to approve measures that would, in effect, raise their own taxes. A recent California Poll shows 52 percent support for Prop. 153.

"It used to be there were large numbers of voters who would just vote for any bond measure. That group of voters just isn't around much any more," said "Most voters want to know very specifically what they're voting on. There is a general frustration over the economy."

There is no organized opposition to Proposition 153. The California Ballot Pamphlet contains a statement signed by three individuals who oppose the bond measure. Their argument contends that students should bear all costs related to their educations, including campus buildings.

Where do you stand on abortion?

NICK NAZARIAN/The Chronicle

Tanya Schwab

"I'm pro-choice. I don't think that the government has any right to impose what they feel on women, or even men. I think everybody should be able to decide for themselves."

Aaron Watson

"I feel that it should be a woman's right to choose about abortion. I just think that ultimately the decision should be hers."

Mika Kobashi and Tomoko Miyazaki

"We think it should be illegal, everything it stands for. Nobody should decide to kill a person, a life."

Sonia Diaz

"I'm definitely pro-choice. I don't believe that anybody can make a decision for a woman except her. I saw a great t-shirt the other day in San Francisco that said 'Keep a woman's right to choose, unless George Bush is free to babysit.'"

Carlos Chavez

"I feel that women have a right to make up their own mind because it goes a lot farther than just physical. She has to also worry about financially being able to take care of that child."

Academics not athletics

The California Public Works Board, with an acute sense of what is needed in this part of the state, has allocated $22 million for the construction of a gymnasium/sports complex on the Cal State, San Bernardino campus. The new basketball arena will be the largest such facility in the Inland Empire.

And now, a news flash from the real world:

Proposition 153, on the June primary ballot, asks California's voters to authorize $900 million in general obligation bonds. Revenues from the bond sales would fund facilities construction on public college campuses over the next two years. If approved, Prop. 153 will appropriate $46 million for new buildings at CSUSB.

The down side to this is that a bond is a loan, not a gift. The state will eventually have to repay that $900 million, plus interest, to the bond holders. The upshot: passage of Proposition 153 will depend on the voters' willingness to raise their own taxes. With this in mind, and noting the performance of similar bond measures in recent elections, it is fairly safe to say that Prop 153 has about as much chance of passing as Charlie Brown has of successfully kicking a field goal.

It just seems strange that at a time when CSUSB has students sweltering in rinky-dink portable classrooms, when students face curriculum cutbacks, faculty and staff layoffs, and fee increases, that the state can find $22 million to spend on an athletic facility. It seems more reasonable that, until these other needs are met, the gym project can wait.

Besides, do we need a multi-million dollar gymnasium? It isn't as if we didn't have a serviceable gym. It would be a different matter if we had a world-class basketball program like UCLA's, that could assure big crowds at home games. If that were the case, broadcast rights sales and various promotions would justify the expense of building a new gym, and provide a revenue bonanza for the University.

But let's return to the real world.

For the state to fund a new gym when we need classrooms, teachers and expanded academic programs indicates a warped sense of priorities (especially when we have sufficient, but perhaps not optimal, gymnasium space). That the gym project gets $22 million while other projects must go begging to an unreceptive electorate is an example of a madness that can only be called politics.

Letters

Rebuttal to Derry

Editor, The Chronicle:

In response to the letter by Neiland K. Derry in the April 27 issue of the Chronicle, it is necessary to bring to light some obvious, and some not so obvious, facts concerning the issues presented in his letter.

While Mr. Derry has made claim to certain facts, he does not provide the sources of his information. In addition, it is apparent that he has chosen to use only the facts that conform to his belief system while disregarding those that do not. It is this kind of biased and malicious response to Homosexuals and other minority groups that has ensured the proliferation of prejudice and hate crimes.

Mr. Derry denounces the alleged use of "misguided and vociferous assaults" and haughtily employs them against any issue that is not to his liking.

Mr. Derry has claimed to have an intimate knowledge of gay and lesbian lifestyle. How does he know that lesbians find oral sex to be inadequate? How does he know that oral sex is their only option? how does he know the extent of gay and lesbian promiscuity? You can quote statistics, Mr. Derry, but please let us know where they come from. And please keep them in their original context, rather than using only the information that feels right to you or fits into your current belligerent agenda.

Mr. Derry has made claim that his fiancée has been "propositioned by many...so-called monogamous lesbians." The majority of lesbians and gay men on this campus are closeted even to the Gay community. In this light, one has to ask what places your fiancée frequents or what message is she sending out that promotes these propositions? We also have to ask you, Mr. Derry, where is it that you are encountering so many of us?

Mr. Derry's references to Christianity and the Bible are disconcerting, based on his apparent double standard. He denounces Homosexuality based on a passage from The Letters of Paul to the Romans. Early in your letter, Mr. Derry, you stated that if there was any question concerning your sexual "fears and inadequacies", we need only ask your fiancée. What of The Letters of Paul to the Galatians, 5:19-21, which clearly stigmatizes fornication? Mr. Derry, do only certain rules of the Bible apply to only certain people?

It should also be noted that while Jesus denounced such iniquities as adultery, He never once mentioned Homosexuality. How odd that the one person Christianity is based on had nothing to say about a subject that you so venomously refute. Mr. Derry, you wield the Bible like a sword, to maim and destroy that which you do not understand, rather than as a tool of compassion, understanding and enlightenment.

It is true that only 5 percent of all reported cases of AIDS are heterosexual males. What Mr. Derry neglected to mention was that this 5 percent did not include heterosexual males that were also I.V. drug users. All included the heterosexual population is responsible for 18% of all reported AIDS cases in San Bernardino County (Inland AIDS Project (IAP), 800-499-AIDS).

Mr. Derry stated that "there has been NO dramatic increases in new (AIDS) cases" within the heterosexual population." The Centers For Disease Control in Atlanta, GA (800-432-2437) has issued the statement that the fastest growing population of reported AIDS cases is the heterosexual male. In addition, IAP has stated that the heterosexual females being treated for AIDS has increased 94.3 percent in the last five years. Mr. Derry, you have also stated that any unprotected, un-safe sexual practice puts you at risk to all forms of Sexually Transmitted Disease. AIDS does not discriminate!

The Gay and Lesbian Union is currently producing an on-campus educational film on homophobia. Funds were granted to us by the Cultural Planning Committee in hopes that this film will educate others on the seriousness of homophobia. We would like to extend a personal invitation to you, Neiland K. Derry, to express your opinion on our film. You can advise us of your decision via inter-campus mail.

It should be noted that although Jaye and Reyes have signed this letter, many members of the GLU met to voice their concerns regarding this matter.

Is the gym worth 55,000 student fees?

by Kevin Kelley
Chronicle staff writer

Is it just me?

Did the world end or something? Did Atlas go on Worker's Comp because of on the job stress? Were all the sane people gobbled up, and told to never run for a political office or become school administrators? Has El Nino begun to show its effects? I don't know, maybe wool blinders are covering my sacrificial eyes, but I can still smell the wrong.

Proposition 153 is hard for me to grasp. On the heels of massive teacher layoffs, escalating student fees, and a system-wide budget problem, the Powers That Be have deemed it necessary to ask the voters of California if they want, among less-bannered reasons, a new sports complex at CSUSB. This is like a room addition just before foreclosure.

On Friday, May 15, the State Public Works Board (Pubwobo) gave final approval to initial funding for a $22 million sports complex at CSUSB. This sports complex will include, (please hold your applause until all the names have been announced:) a 5000-seat gymnasium, a practice baseball field, 12 tennis courts, four maids a-milking, a running track, six outdoor basketball courts, a swimming pool, a soccer field, new housing for the Physical Education and Athletic Departments, and a lifetime supply of Rice-a-Roni—the San Francisco Treat—.

OK, I'm a sports fan (not a Bud man, or a Cubs fan). I am male. And well, sports and tools, that's all I need to know, right? I think that that is what those Pubwobo people must be thinking. The sports complex comes with a package deal that includes library renovations, a new sociology building, and some other needy items, but the sports complex is the "highlight" of the Prop. 153 monies that our campus will receive, if Prop. 153 passes in June.

With the aforementioned in mind, let's break down this new sports complex, and see if we might scratch our collective heads on a few of its offerings:

5,000-seat gym—Let's face it, this is for Men's Basketball. AD (Absolute Dimwit, perhaps) David Suenram was quoted in the San Bernardino Sun as saying: "Without good seating,....it's hard to market a men's basketball program." C'mon homey. It's hard to market (read recruit), because you bring in a good coach too late to recruit. Coach Reggie Morris has already proved that, if given time, he is capable of recruiting good prospects.

The existing gym is big enough for the team to find it, they show up for the games okay, it's their classrooms that need to be bigger. A couple of games were SRO'd this year, but not enough to warrant a $22 million new complex. The team did a helluva job, on the court, this year despite Suenram, but even Michael Jordan doesn't get a new sports complex.

Enough about basketball, let's move on with the winner's list:

A baseball practice field-

Baseball, that's another Suenram screw-up. Don't give Chuck Deagle a full-time position, he only took a team to the College World Series. And certainly don't give Coach Don Parnell any time to recruit (it's a Suenram thang,) that would make his job easier. And most of all, don't give them an on-campus site to play their games, but give basketball two.

12 tennis courts- I don't like tennis, so I'll leave this one alone due to my prejudice to rich people's sports (this goes for golf, too.)

Running track- OK, no debate. We don't have one, so let's build it. One point: We don't have a track team. I guess it's a Field of Dreams, "If you build it, they will come" thing.

6 outdoor basketball courts- No problem here. I have seen White Men Can't Jump (I also live it.) I like basketball. Besides, some concrete and a few poles can't be that much of that $22 mill.

Swimming pool- We already have one perfectly good pool, but everyone in CA deserves another. Maybe it's been crowded, too.

New home for the PE and Athletic Dept.- I didn't realize that they were homeless. Seriously though, this will only be a summer home, I guess that explains the pool.

Please. This is not a sports issue, it's a common sense issue. Fee increases, instructors being "let go," and impending budget cuts, and someone thinks that we need more buildings. $22 million is the equivalent to 55,000 student fees (check it out, $55,000 \times $400$). That is more than all of the student fee's for an entire year. This bond could be offered as a "buy one (year), get one free" financial aid for all of us.

The $22 million being offered up from Prop. 153 comes from the same people that are talking of cutting the CSU budget by 12 to 18 percent. Who was the bright person that thought that a couple thousand construction workers being employed for a couple of years, would be better than keeping on the same number of college instructors? I'm just not getting this. Just a minute...There. Nope, clicking my heels together and calling out for Auntie Emm, doesn't make it any clearer.

Can't they think of a better way to spend $22 million (actually $46 million, if you count the total anticipated bond money,) than providing me with a better seat at a Division II basketball game? I don't know, maybe it is just me.

Graduation fenced in by bureaucracy

by Steven Jennings
Chronicle editor in chief

FENCE-ATHON: I'm getting the feeling that there's an official on this campus who thinks that hordes of chain link fences sprawling across the campus is both aesthetically pleasing and convenient. Every time I turn around, I'm confronted with another six-foot high eyesore. I didn't think they were that serious about keeping people off the lawns.

I can count four construction projects going on right now and there's a fifth one on the way (the new gym.) I understand that the reason for these additions en masse is that the cash for these projects has already been ear-marked and is therefore subject to "use it or lose it" bureaucracy. But five projects at the same time? When does progress become too much? There must be some sort of aesthetic or practicality law on the books that prohibits the dissection of CSUSB with huge amounts of industrial grade chicken wire.

Well, I suppose its all for the best. With the addition of these new buildings perhaps the administration will see fit to remove the not-so-temporary classrooms (NOT!) With graduation approaching, one would think that the administration might be concerned about the effect of all these fences on visitors' perceptions of the University. Some of them might mistake CSUSB for another state institution where fences are a little more appropriate, like Cal State Correctional Facility, San Bernardino.

Speedy readin': What's the deal with that black letter on white sign recently posted at the campus main entrance? I may be speaking for myself but I can't remember the last time I was able to read 15 lines of text in my usual morning comatose state on the way to the parking lot. Do they really think we're gonna actually read it on our way in? C'mon guys, I can't shell out $300 for a speed readin' class. I think a simple "ENTER AT YOUR OWN RISK" type disclaimer would have done the job nicely. Especially if it was placed just after the cute yellow sign reading "BUMP HEAD." Another great welcome for our graduation guests.

Day yard graduation: Of course the steel infrastructure of an architectural behemoth is a really desirable backdrop for this year's commencement ceremonies. Seems that the whole event is gonna have a Chance at greatness though. Chancellor Barry Munitz that is. No word yet on the topic of his address. Considering the standout feature of the surroundings, I think he should tie in that "building for the future" theme.

Gee, if we only had another wide open green space available? Something that's close, flat and scenic.

Fail me if I'm wrong, but don't we have some soccer fields that fit that set of criteria somewhat? Not to mention the extra seating on those grassy embankments. Am I the only one who thought of this?

Playing catch-up: I've heard that some students are upset over groundskeeping's ploy to get them wet on their way to classes in the middle of the day. It's because groundskeeping is playing catch up sprinkling. As Paul Frazier, senior groundskeeper explains it, "We're day watering to make up for the dryness that occurred when some of the main water lines were damaged during construction projects."

Sounds like a good enough reason to me. But, does it hurt the grass to water them in the daylight. Frazee says no. "We lose a lot of water to evaporation, but it doesn't hurt the grass," he says. Frazee also said daylight sprinkling isn't their normal watering policy, however it's necessary to get the place greened-up for graduation.

Soccer fields look green to me...

I don't buy it Bill: There they go again. Those twine strings are up again on the patio between U Hall and the Student Union. Looks like more of our friends in groundskeeping are performing an exercise in futility. It's what Director of Building and Planning Bill Shum attributes to human behavior.

When they built U Hall, they created that neat cement patio with integrated grass patches in front of the Student Union. But let's just say that some of the cement walkways provided are less than a "bee-line" between the two buildings. This is where Shum's human behavior steps in.

According to Bill, "People have a problem with walking on lawns." Bill even admitted that he has a turf fixation—he sometimes enjoys straying from the concrete path to feel the soft cushion of grass beneath his feet.

But Bill, I don't think putting in a two to three foot walkway is going too encroach upon the architectural splendor on the patio. Neither argument washes with me: ASI officers having to look out their windows at too much cement nor an increase in "micro-climate heating" by the addition of more cement.

Bill, let's face the reality that when it comes to walking between classes, students are going to take the shortest route possible. I think our groundskeeping friend Frazee had it right when he said they normally let the students develop their own pathways. Then, when the pathways are worn-in, they are cemented over and everyone's happy. Except maybe ASI won't be too happy about the cement, but then again, they're moving anyway.

tional Amendments excluded an enumerated right to privacy from the Constitution was not a matter of oversight or mistake. It was excluded to prevent the type of "Judicial Imperialism" exemplified in Roe. These rights were to be left to the states as the 10th Amendment establishes. "The powers not delegated to the States are reserved to the States respectively, or to the people."

Abortion is not a matter of a Constitutional right, but of the states rights, specifically built within the U.S. Constitution. The idea that a court on the other side of the continent extended the authority of the Federal Government to further meddle with the sovereignty of the people within their respective states was unacceptable; another liberal, pro-Big Government whitewash of Constitutional limits.

To ignore the 10th Amendment, as the past Supreme Courts have, and then invent an unenumerated "right" to abortion from an already unenumerated "right" to privacy was to disregard all Constitutional limits on the powers of the Judiciary. This create an omnipotent Supreme Court that could completely disregard the Constitution, and create any unenumerated "right" within the 14th Amendment it might desire.

The Supreme Court, though, was not the only branch with evolving delusions of grandeur. Now Congress wants to get into the act of overstepping its Constitutional limits also. If Americans wish to have a Constitutional right to abortion, we have the option of a Constitutional Amendment. Any attempt by Congress to create a law protecting abortion without an Amendment is in direct violation of the 10th Amendment and Congress's delegated powers within Article 1, Section 8 of the U.S. Constitution.

Liberal Politicos, such as Laurence Tribe, seem ignorant of the limitations placed upon Congress. Congress does not have the ability to create or repeal rights, except by amending the Constitution with the approval of three-quarters (38) of the State Legislatures. Alone, Congress has only the power to protect, through legislation, rights that are protected within the U.S. Constitution based on Supreme Court Rulings. Through the "Freedom of Choice Act," Congress is unconstitutionally attempting to usurp the powers of the Judiciary and the enumerated rights of the states.

It is now prudent for the Congress and the Judiciary to revisit the limits of their respective Constitutional Powers. The reversal of Roe and the presidential veto, or the Supreme Court overturning of the "Freedom of Choice Act," are the first positive steps in their return to states rights and the limitation of intervention into state affairs by the present Federal Juggernaut.

She compared the current trend to the Communist experience in Romania where abortions were prohibited.

"I was able to avoid the back alley, but some of you and those you know may not," she said.

Smith, on the other hand, acts not out of personal experience, but out of principle.

"I believe abortion takes the life of an unborn child," she said.

She based her speech on the concept that the pro-choice movement has objectified and dehumanized a fetus.

"Pregnancy is not about potential life but about a life with potential," she said.

She added that life, which she defined as beginning at conception, has been denigrated.

"The womb, instead of being the safest place to be has become the most dangerous," she said.

She contradicted Michaelman's view that abortion was a woman's choice.

"Abortion is about much more than a woman's right to control her own body," Smith said. "By definition pregnancy means a new and unique life has been formed. Abortion destroys that life."

Although the theme was "The Abortion Debate: Who Decides?" the two women had opposing views on even the inclusion of the word "decision."

Michaelman proposed that "America is heading back to the days when politicians decide." While Smith said that there was no decision, just as society cannot, or perhaps should not, decide about the life of any other human.

Michaelman blasted the pro-life movement because "The anti-choice movement is not working with NARAL to ensure pre-natal care."

Smith objected to that statement by citing the 1700 Crisis Pregnancy Centers. "The Pro-life movement puts their heart where their mouth is," she said, counterarguing that the Pro-Choice movement offers only "The abortion clinic at the corner" which "provides only one thing—a $250 abortion."

The issue of birth control was then discussed. Michaelman supported a variety of birth control methods available, including RU486. Smith said she supported pre-conception birth control. "We don't have a problem with a condom, we do have a problem with a suction machine."

There were about 300 people at the debate. Most were middle-age couples. Various religious organizations and Planned Parenthood were represented. The audience was surprisingly restrained in an era when discussions of this type tend not to be.

Thirty people lined up to ask questions in the 45-minute question-and-answer session following formal speeches. However, only nine of them had the opportunity to speak though.

Their questions ranged from where Crisis Pregnancy Centers are located in San Bernardino County to Federal funding for abortions.

At the conclusion of the formal debate, the audience formed circles around the two speakers, some wanting to continue arguing, and others wanting to extend support to the women who represented their ideology.

ernment affirms the "right" of an individual woman to make a choice concerning her own body.

And by ceasing to fund abortion clinics in any way will alleviate the pressure being placed on the government by pro-life forces. The government will no longer be accused of supporting abortions with the tax money of people who are morally opposed to abortion.

Abortion is not an issue that the government should be involved in. It is divisive, emotional and involves too many secondary issues (religion, women's rights, etc.) to be properly resolved by government. There are some areas where the government should not intrude and this is one of them. The right of a woman to exercise sovereignty over her own reproductive system is a given.

But the government should never have gotten involved in the abortion issue.

Students protest Commons food

by Nick Nazarian
Chronicle photography director

Many residence halls students boycotted the Commons Food Service on May 19 by either going out to eat or by sitting outside the cafeteria and eating a home-cooked meal.

On April 22, the Residence Hall Food Committee (RHFC) presented a memo to Food Service Director Keith Ernst, stating concerns that the students had. The first five points outlined in the memo were addressed that night, with the remaining requests to be discussed at the next meeting on May 6.

At the May 6 meeting more topics from the list were covered, but all of the concerns were not answered at the time. Another follow-up meeting was scheduled for May 20.

On May 18 a memo was sent to President Anthony Evans, Vice President David De Mauro, and Executive Director of Foundation Services Arthur Butler. Ernst received his copy of the memo May Commons patrons boycotting a special dinner.

19, hours before the "sit in" began.

The memo was actually a packet consisting of a cover letter explaining the reasons behind the protest, the original list of demands, and copies of a petition signed by 60-70 residence halls tenants.

Protest organizer and Food Committee Chairman Christopher Todd Hilliard said, "They assumed that everything was alright. All the protest was for was to show that nothing was being done about the quality of the food."

Ernst said, "Improving the board plan is what we do here. We try to maintain our food service on the line every day to the highest quality possible. Frankly this was a problem in communication. Students didn't feel that we had responded adequately to what they wanted."

The boycott coincided with the Commons Steak Night where students are given the choice of either a steak or large shrimp, instead of the standard fare. Only about half of all board plan members attended this special event.

cent is basically a bond reduction, with no return of lost classes or any extra financial aid to offset the increase.

The 40 percent increase would see the return of the 10,000 classes, the chief goal of the CFA, and also allow for extra financial aid to be offered.

Dream denied

With either increase a new problem arises. Esteban Diaz, Director of the Center for Equity in Education, expresses that there will be "a disproportionate number of minority students who will be effected." He explains that many minority students are from poorer income families, and are usually first generation university students.

Chancellor Munitz agrees with this position. "The CSU and the state will appear to be reneging on its promise of access when more minorities and the poor are ready to enter the system. It will look like we changed the rules just as the diversity of students increased. We will either debate this issue now in the board rooms or later in the streets."

Chancellor Munitz believes that if the CSU system receives the $1.66 billion from Gov. Wilson it can "get by and we can restore some of the cuts." Munitz added that he wants a one year moratorium on spending cuts and other actions.

The moratorium would allow for a reevaluation of the systems Master Plan, which guarantees a public higher education for all qualified Californians. This is a denial of the "American dream" says Munitz.

"What we really worry about is that the University says 20,000 students will be left out and 1,000 faculty members will be laid off," Russell Bogh, a CSUSB student and local association representative told the Sun. "If we can have guaranteed classes, we'll pay more."

"If you want to continue affordable higher education in California" adds CFA's Clarke, "the state must pay for it. You can't expect the students to carry the entire financial load."

Answering pregnancy questions

Pregnancy can be the source of joy or great anxiety. People go to great lengths to become pregnant and to terminate a pregnancy. While there are many methods to enhance fertility, most college students are probably more interested in preventing conception. Clearly, contraception is the preferred, most efficient and cost-effective manner in which to avoid pregnancy. Unfortunately, the misconceptions concerning how to avoid becoming pregnant abound.

Some of the most common misconceptions concerning how to avoid becoming pregnant are published by the Kinsey Institute and are listed below.

Can you get pregnant the first time you have sex?

Yes.

Can a girl get pregnant before she has her first menstrual flow?

Yes.

Can you get pregnant if the penis is withdrawn just before ejaculation?

Absolutely.

Can you get pregnant if you have sex in a bathtub, pool or lake?

Yes.

Can you get pregnant if you douche immediately after sex?

Seeking Sexual Literacy

TIFFANY WRIGHT

Yes, douching is not an effective method of contraception.

Can you get pregnant by swallowing semen?

NO.

Can you get pregnant if ejaculation occurs on, but not inside, the female genitals?

Yes. Sperm travels, and there is certainly a chance that one of the 200 to 300 million sperm ejaculated could reach the female egg and fertilize it.

Can you get pregnant if you have sex during your menstrual flow?

Yes. The risk of getting pregnant is lower when a woman is on her period, however, it can and does happen. A woman can ovulate and menstruate irregularly, and sperm can live up to eight days in the reproductive tract. So, even if a woman only has sex during her period she can either be ovulating or the sperm can still be present in her reproductive track a week later to fertilize an egg should ovulation occur at this time.

In general, the best advice is do not have intercourse without contraception unless you want to get pregnant.

Wright is a graduate student in psychology at CSUSB.

Educators create AIDS awareness

by Charlene S. Hurley
Chronicle advertising manager

The AIDS Peer Education Program is a campus organization which works to increase awareness about many issues involving HIV and AIDS. The group focuses on topics such as effective communication in relationships, date rape, drugs, alcohol and safer sex dangers.

The peer educators hold bi-monthly seminars in the dorms, perform presentations for classes and clubs upon request, and hold weekly office hours in the campus Health Center.

"Many students come by during our office hours to talk about various health-related issues and to receive free condoms. We welcome any chance to do an AIDS presentation and we have a lot of great activities, pamphlets, and videos", said Dawn Levine, an AIDS peer educator.

For the past two years, the peer educators have set up a Valentine's Day booth, in observance see "AIDS" page 18

'Madwoman' rescues society

by Amy Heritage
Chronicle staff writer

A uniquely intellectual yet insane comedy, Jean Giraudoux's "The Madwoman of Chaillot," opens at Cal State, San Bernardino, this week.

The play portrays the universal struggle between the common people who want to enjoy life and the ambitious people who feel that others are unimportant and must not get in their way.

Directed by Prof. Amanda Sue Rudisill, the twenty four member cast represents a microcosm of the various types of people found in an industrialized society.

The play opens with a power crazed multi-corporation president, played by Michael Lake, teaming up with a worthless playboy baron, played by Tex Acosta. The president is looking for a name and a purpose for a corporation, shares of which he is already selling.

The president sees what he is looking for in the dispassionate face of a sinisterly cool prospector, played by Orville Mendoza. The playboy sees what he is looking for in every pretty face including that of the broker, played by Benita Anorbes, who has an overwhelming infatuation for money.

The greed group is made complete with a miserly little man, played by Alva Moring, who invests his life's savings into their corrupt scheme.

The prospector believes there is oil beneath the town of Chaillot and wants to drill at the site of the cafe terrace of Chez Frances, a hub of the community. To get authorization to do so he has already planned blackmail and murder.

If from what you have read thus far you picture this play as a strong adventure/murder mystery with interesting characters, then good. At least some tangibility to this complex performance is provided. But, the afore mentioned characters are not exactly the leads and their scheme is not exactly the plot.

The plot of "The Madwoman of Chaillot" is a movement in which exploited individuals regain power over their lives and their community.

A sweet young man, Pierre, played by Jason Ferrell, saves himself from the prospector's manipulations and finds friendship in the people of Chaillot and true love as well. (Comedy, adventure, mystery, and even romance, yes this play has it all.) He and a sweet young woman, Irma, played by Keri Hostetler, fall in love at first sight.

Irma had put up with men's romantic advances in the past but had never said "I love you." Although this part of the play is not fully developed (perhaps none of the many themes are) is implied that Irma, too, saves herself from men's manipulations, cherishes friendship and finds true love.

A wise deaf mute, played by Ana A. Cruz, gains the power of vocal speech. A nonplussed street singer, played by Erica Perkins, recalls, with the help of a friend, the rest of a song that has been preoccupying her for years.

The Madwoman of Chaillot, Countess Aurelia, played by Edith Scrvin, regains possession of her beloved boa, as well as saving the world in time to feed her cats.

The other people of Chaillot regain their optimism. This motley crew includes: a sewer man, played by Luke Hunt, who wears his boots on his hands as a matter of cordiality, the waiter, played by Eddie Cauphage, the shoelace peddler, played by Karen Jensen, the flower girl, played by Jennifer Wood, the doorman, played by J.W. Prost, Therese, played by Angela Dudding, Paulette, played by Krista Niven, Dr. Jadin, played by Todd Spencer, and the policeman, played by David Brown.

The portrayal of the policeman as a dumb, nervous cop is almost as cute as the portrayal of the press as part of machine of ambitious exploiters.

The law enforcement image is remedied, though, with a realistic portrayal by Wendi Hastings of a police sergeant who is a champion of the people but is tired of fighting the system.

Although the people of Chaillot are oppressed by the system-the machine to which corporate presidents, brokers, playboys, misers, and evidently, the press belongs- they come together to protect each other and let the greedy self destruct.

But, before they allow the greed group to be pulled by their own ambitions down the Madwoman's never ending stairwell of doom, they hold a trial to ensure justice.

The ragpicker, played by Bill Lance, provides for greed group with an impressive and memorable defense, dripping with sarcasm. The audacious Madame Josephine, played by Golda Mainville, presides the trial as the honorable judge.

She makes a striking contrast to her friends, Madame Constance, played by Jennie Butler, and Mademoiselle Gabrielle, played by Jennifer Tafolla. The two are too busy bickering over Josephine's imaginary dog and Gabrielle's imaginary guests to be much help in saving the world.

Although these ladies are not crucial to the saving of the world, they and the Madwoman are imperative to the humor of the play. With their off the wall imaginations and humorous oxymoron the audience will be intrigued by their character.

The more insightful members of the audience may become absorbed in the ladies' offbeat philosophies and in the other many esthetics in the play.

Those who just want to be entertained will find plenty of burlesque and slapstick as well as word play and satire.

The performance runs May 29, 30 and June 3-6 at 8:15 pm, and May 31 and June 7 at 2:00 pm. For ticket information, call 880-5876.

Something to Crowe about

by John Andrews
Chronicle sports editor

After giving us a 90's take on no nonsense, R&B flavored rock with Shake Your Moneymaker two years ago, the Black Crowes are back with might to match their mouth.

Outspoken lead vocalist Chris Robinson arrogantly compared Moneymaker to the Stones ragged classic Exile On Mainstreet when it first hit the charts in 1990. With the new Southern Harmony and Musical Companion, it appears Robinson and his bandmates are beginning to live up to his boast.

The Crowes must have had such a sound in mind this time abandoning the crisp production of Moneymaker for a more informal and, in some cases, completely live sound. Robinson said in a simulcast interview on Los Angeles radio station KLOS just before Southern Harmony's release that the Crowes had used now-primitive analog equipment for a more intimate rapport with listeners. Fortunately, it fits Robinson's bluesy rasp and the band's raucous penchant for jamming, like a glove.

The first single "Remedy" serves notice of Southern Harmony's grit. Younger brother Rich Robinson and new lead guitarist Marc Ford tear into the song's opening riff ferociously over a swaggering rhythm while Robinson belts out pleas for satisfaction. The song's power is punctuated by a rhythmic coda the band will almost certainly extend in their live shows. The Crowes continue the boisterous fun on "Hotel Illness," "My Morning Song," and the lead-off track "Sting Me," which Robinson begins yelping, "If you feel like a riot/ Then don't deny it." A nice piece of unintended irony.

As they did on Moneymaker, however, the band is able to successfully shift into a more somber, gospel-flavored mood on Southern Harmony. This finds Robinson at his vocal and lyrical best. "Thorn In My Pride" begins with Rich Robinson's wistful acoustic picking, and gradually layers in vintage Hammond B-3 organ and some sharp percussion from Steve Gorman. "Do you dream to touch me/And smile down deep inside/Or could you just kill me/Its hard to make up your mind," sings Robinson with dynamic flair. "Sometimes Salvation," and "Bad Luck Blue Eyes Goodbye" feature the same slower, bluesy style with Ford mixing his choppy leads with Rich Robinson's slide playing.

Studio ace Chuck Leavell, who provided tasteful keyboards on Moneymaker is replaced by Ed Hawrysch this time around. A mixture of piano, organ, and electric piano are more prominent on Southern Harmony, particularly at the end of "Remedy."

The Crowes close curiously with a cover of Bob Marley's "Time Will Tell." Played and sung wearily, it seems to be the band's response to the growing uncertainty felt by its generation.

The rough-edged feel of the album combined with the lack of radio ready hits found on the last one probably mean Southern Harmony won't be as commercially popular. Like many, I liked the uninhibited spirit of Shake Your Moneymaker, but wondered if the Black Crowes were legitimate carriers of the blues/rock mantle. The Southern Harmony and Musical Companion is an indication that they can indeed make fiery, impassioned music on their own terms.

CD Review: Mignight oil burns blue

by Mitchell Halbrech
Chronicle staff writer

Finally, a band has come out with a live album worth listening to. Midnight Oil has just released their live album "Scream in Blue Live."

"Scream in Blue Live" wasn't just the recording of one particular Midnight Oil concert. Songs on this album come from five different concerts as early as 1982 and as recent as 1990.

After the opening track, "Scream in Blue," Midnight Oil sets up a furious pace with the old KROQ hit "Read About It." Peter Garrett rasps his vocals as the rest of the band tries to keep up.

The first five tracks keep up a fairly rapid pace until the sixth track "Stars of Warburton," on the band's prior album "Blue Sky Mining." "Stars of Warburton" although a little bit slower than the prior tracks is moving enough in the melody and lyrics to warrant being on this live album.

A lot of people who aren't big Midnight Oil fans probably remember their smash hit "Beds Are Burning" from their album "Diesel and Dust."

Two other great tracks from "Diesel and Dust" that were somewhat popular "Sell My Soul" and "Sometimes" are included on "Scream in Blue Live."

An interesting note is that both the album sleeve and cover list only twelve tracks. However thirteen are on the album, the last one sounding like it was just recorded in the studio.

"Scream in Blue Live" is a must for fans of Australian group Midnight Oil. Anybody who has seen this group live can identify with this album as it captures the spirit and passion of Midnight Oil.

Drive nets 46 units of blood

Forty-six people gave the Gift of Life on Thursday, May 7, by donating to Cal State, San Bernardino's blood reserve fund. Another seven attempted to donate, but were deferred for a variety of medical reasons.

"The Health Center would like to thank these special donors and applaud the Student Health Advisory Committee for hosting the blood drive," Cecilia McCarron of the Student Health Center said.

She extended appreciation to the student workers who worked at the registration tables and to businesses which donated discount coupons, tee shirts and gift certificates including the Coyote Bookstore, Recreational Sports, Jerseys Pizza and the San Bernardino Blood Bank.

in-Chief Charlene S. Hurley] accurately reported the key elements of this matter.

Our students will find it helpful to learn that, while the Health Center will be closed in July and August, it will be open right up until June 30, and will re-open September 1.

We want students to know that the Health Center will be able to fill most prescriptions to last over the summer. Also, the Health Center staff will make arrangements with individual patients for outside referrals so that continuity of care can be smoothly maintained.

This means that, with careful planning, most students will still be able to benefit from this valuable service without interruption.

V-ball stuff

Hey Spike, What Do You Like?

For all of you who have been asking "Where's the stuff (get it) on volleyball?", well here it is. Mary's 6-pak are killing (get it) the competition with a 16-0 record, but Noel's Straight Down is setting (get...ah forget it) themselves up for a showdown with the 6-pak, at 13-2. Back to that ever important art of gambling, put a wager down for the Underachievers, they look surprisingly tough. But, for you hardcores, keep an eye on Rex Port's underdog Jersey's Specials.

Be-bop-a-lew-a-baby what I say

An astonishing 54 students participated in the "Walk of Life," Walk for Wellness, on May 13. The Walk was conducted under the guise of a poker walk. Walkers received a playing card at each of the five stations on the course and, in the end, Mark Sanden held the winning hand. Mark won a one year membership to Gold's Gym (Isn't that were Hans and Franz work out?). Tina Rojas, Mark Williams, and Julie Kim were also among the 28 prize winners. Those believing that they, too, were prize winners can pick up their winnings from Judy, in PE122.

Where's my Rex Ports Tee-Shirt?

Stick it to Ya

Women's Hockey Tournament? Hammond Eggs, recently hired by the Rex Port's office, wants to conduct a one-day hockey tournament for women only. We need at least four teams, so if anyone is interested, please call Hammond, Rex, Joe, (John, Paul, George, or Ringo) or anyone at X5235.

Answers? We don't need no stinkin' answers.

(Oh yes we do)

Q: I have entered every intramural event, but have yet to win a single game. How will I ever get an official "Air Coyote" t-shirt?

A: Never won a game, huh? Well you know, it's like the Answer man's dad used to say: "In life there are winners, and there are losers. As long as you're one of them, I am proud." Keeping with that tradition, if you have competed in ten different intramural events and participated at least 30 times, then you too, can have your very own t-shirt. NEXT!

Q: Will the gym be open during the summer?

A: Yes, except for the times occupied by sports camps. Plan on the gym being open Monday thru Friday 9:00am to 4:00pm. The gym will be open for basketball on Monday evenings from 6:00pm to 9:00pm, and for volleyball on Thursday evenings 6:00 to 9:00, too. NEXT!

Q: What color will the ever popular, always in demand Rex Port's t-shirts be next year?

A: Slammer Gray, in honor of the, soon-to-be graduating, Delgado Bros. Ideas for the specific design are being taken at the House of Rex, PE111 or call X5235. NEXT!

Knock, knock. Who's not there? Brian Green, David Glee, Manual Gaytan, Tim Barham, and Mike Tillman. If they were there, they would have picked up their door(k) prizes by now at PE111. C'mon guys there are starving children in the world (just had to give equal time to things my mom used to say). Until NEXT! time, Roses are red, and the violets are blue, get of your lazy butts and do something with your miserable lives you sc-aargh-ouch-wait they'll never take me alive, heellpp. (A note from the editors-The BUD answer guy has cracked. SPORTS SHORTS

California State University, San Bernardino has received financial approval for a new 155,000 square foot Health and Physical Education Complex.

Plans for the complex include two stories of office, lobbies and classroom; one basement level for male and female locker rooms; and a 5,000 seat gymnasium.

Blueprints for the complex are in the plan-check stage, awaiting design approval. No date has been set to begin construction, but architect Vincent Dinh hopes to start in July of this year. If the project does start on time, the complex should be completed for use in the fall of 1993.

Approval for the complex was timed alongside Cal States completion of their first year of NCAA Division II competition.

The NCAA has decided that CSUSB will not receive any sanctions for rules violations that occurred in the women's basketball program.

The open admission of former women's basketball coach Gary Schwartz's two violations gained the attention of the NCAA, but was deemed "not serious enough to warrant sanctions."

The violations were excused as minor and inadvertent, even after reviewing his long history as a Division I and Division II coach.

The Cal State, San Bernardino baseball team got some relief from a tough rookie season in the CCAA when two of its players received ALL-Conference honors.

Utility man John Smith capped off an amazing collegiate comeback story, capturing Second Team All-CCAA honors.

Second baseman Ed Zamora, an offensive spark plug for the Coyotes all year, was named All-CCAA Honorable Mention. -Nick Nazarian

Linksters tee up at nationals

Golfers go for Division II crown in South Carolina

by John Andrews
Chronicle sports editor

The Cal State, San Bernardino Golf Team is putting the close on a "Cinderella" season at the NCAA Division II National Championships in Spartanburg, South Carolina, May 19-22.

After upsetting highly ranked Cal State, Stanislaus at the Western Regional last month, the Coyote linksters slipped into the nation's top twenty Division II teams at number 18, and received a national championship berth.

The Coyotes got off to a slow start firing a first round 309 Tuesday, May 9. Mark Andrews led the Coyotes with an even par 72 while other standouts Rich Zapata and Greg Wilson struggled to 77 and 79 respectively. Coach Bob Smith said the teams 19 stroke deficit is not insurmountable and their first round jitters will pass.

"They may have been trying a little too hard," said Smith in a telephone interview from his hotel room in Spartanburg. "After playing so well in Portland there was bound to be a little let down."

The Coyotes were spurred by Smith's prediction improving by 12 strokes in the second round to 297 and an outside shot at winning the tournament.

Smith said his team had peaked of late and showed little anxiety in preparing for the trip east.

"These kids have a great attitude," said Smith. "I think they may have been a little too loose if anything," he said.

The team arrived three days before the tournament to play two practice rounds and adjust to their unfamiliar surroundings.

"The university and David Suenram gave us plenty of time to get used to the course," said Smith.

Smith said the Coyotes were fortunate enough to play some courses similar to Woolford in Northern California a few weeks before the tournament. He said there were some things, however, that his players could not prepare for.

"It has been extremely humid since we got here," said Smith. "Somebody said it was around 93 percent."

The CSUSB golfers ability to overcome other seemingly minor factors, like tee time, and pairings, Smith said would determine their ability to get back in the tournament.

Playing in the tournament is not without its physical hazards either. When reporting the second round scores to the Cal State, Athletic Office, Smith said the team "Came on despite the copperhead snakes all over the course."

It will clearly take a series of low rounds from most of the Cal State Golfers to capture the Division II title but Smith said the team has probably exceeded anyone's expectations at the start of the season.

"These guys have been all business this year," he said. "They've answered challenges all year."

The Environmental Committee would like to remind you: When you see a blue bin, drop a can in.
